HEY, HENRY - I HAVE A NOTE FOR YOU!
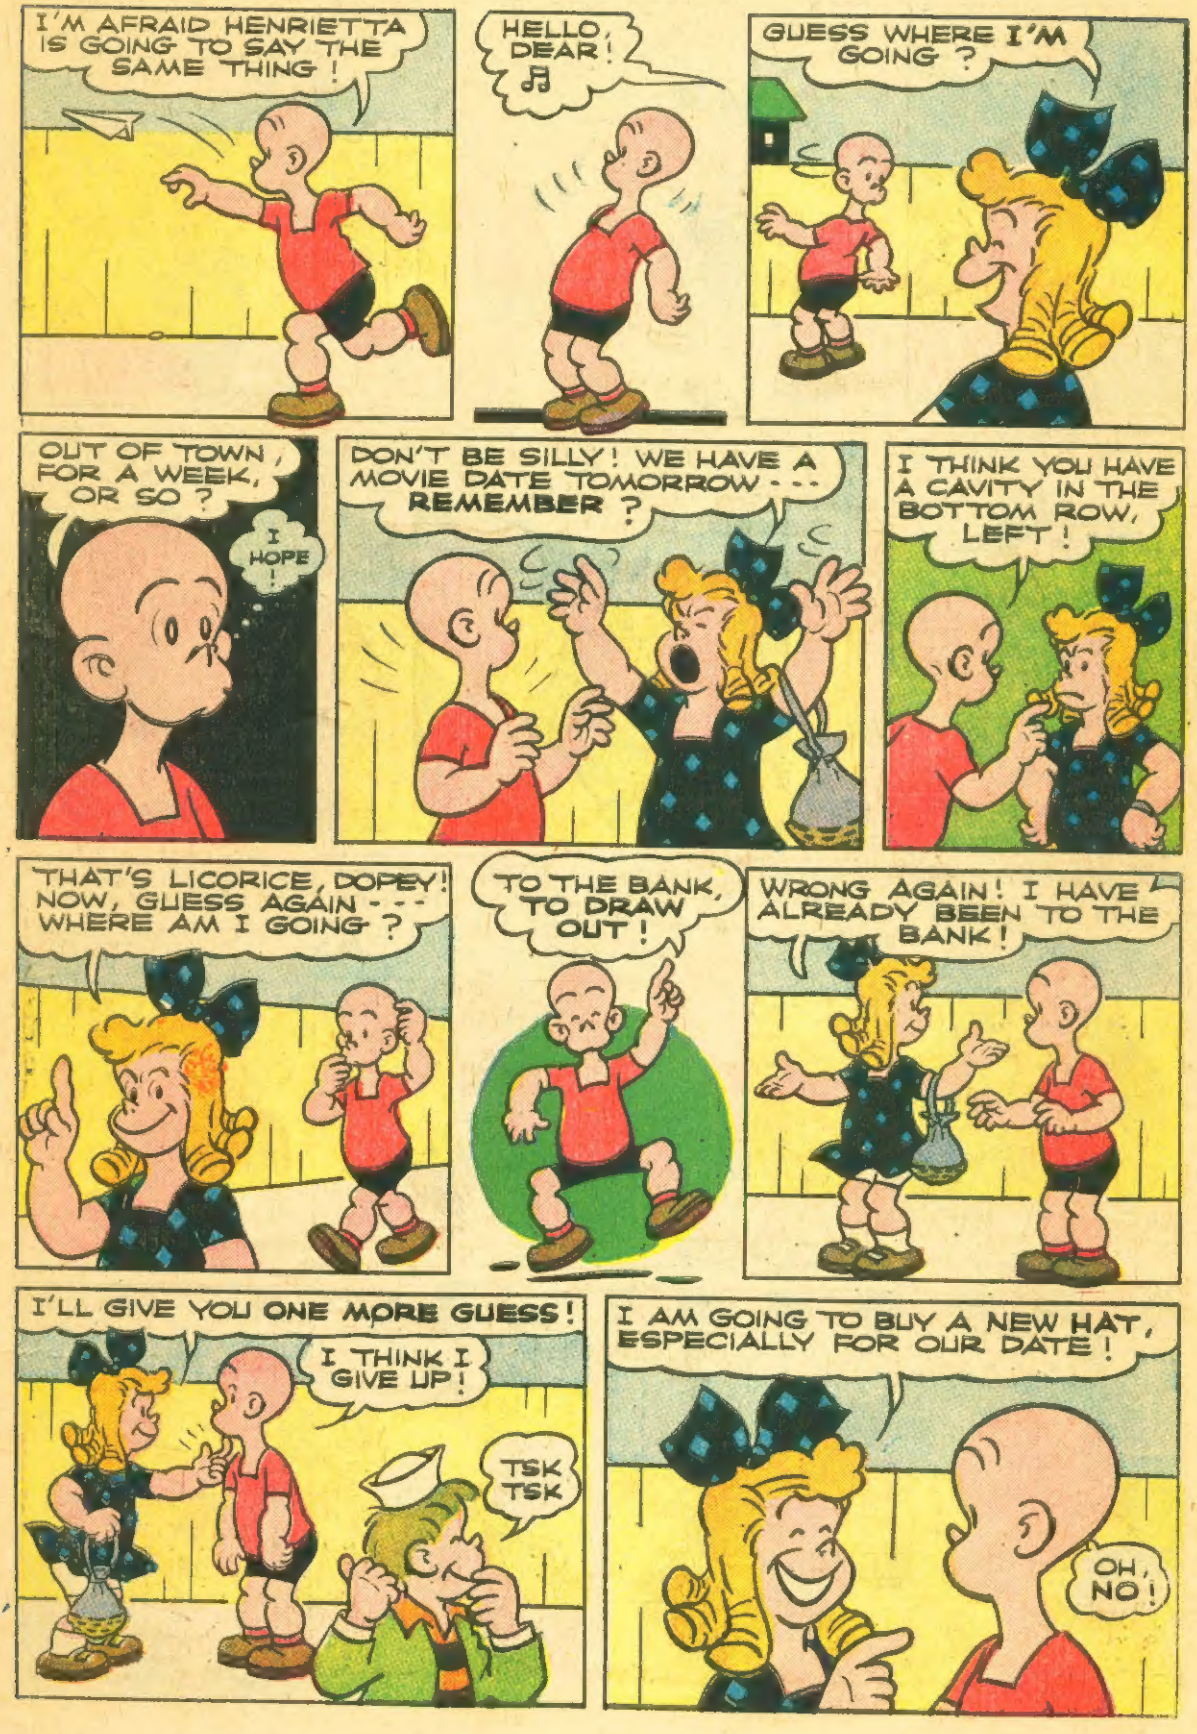
DON'T TELL ME IT IS FROM HENRIETTA?
I WON'T!
IT'S FROM SLIM!
HE SAYS "DEAR HENRY: YOU ARE THE BEST PAL A GUY EVER HAD! CAN YOU LEND ME A QUARTER, TILL NEXT WEEK?" SIGNED, SLIM!
THANKS, JOEY, NOW, I DON'T HAVE TO READ IT!
DON'T YOU HAVE AN ANSWER FOR SLIM, HENRY?
OH, SURE!
TELL HIM I CAN'T SPARE A QUARTER, BECAUSE I MAY HAVE A DATE WITH HENRIETTA!
WAIT, HENRY! I HAVE ANOTHER NOTE FROM SLIM!
ANOTHER ONE?
IT SAYS "YOU ARE A BALD-HEADED CHEAP SKATE", SIGNED SLIM!



I'M AFRAID HENRIETTA IS GOING TO SAY THE SAME THING !

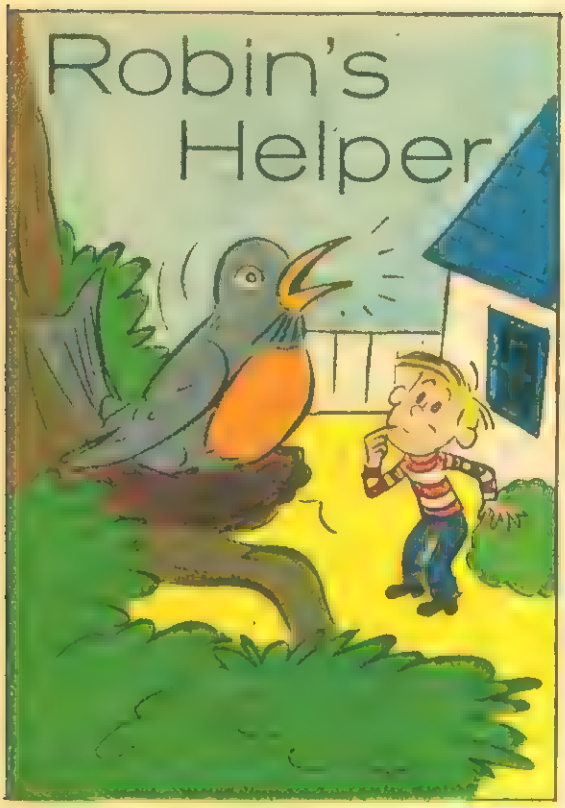
Robin's Helper



The robin seemed surprised to see Helpful Harry in the tree. He acted even more surprised when Harry started helping him build his nest.

The robin thought the nest was all right the way it was. In fact, he was already sitting on the pale blue eggs his wife had laid.

"The nest doesn't look very strong," Harry thought. "I'll help the robin make it stronger."

Harry Applegate was a boy who always liked to be of help. He had "helped" nearly everybody in the neighborhood. He had "helped" them so much—and usually to their sorrow—that they wouldn't let him help them any more.

But the poor robin didn't know what happened to people who were helped by Harry, so at first it didn't object much.

Harry noticed that the robin had woven a piece of string in the nest. "If that's what he wants, I can help him a lot," thought Harry.

He climbed down from the tree and went in the house and came out with his mother's sewing basket. It was filled with spools of silk thread of all colors.

"Oh boy," thought Harry, "the robin will like this."

Harry took the ends of about 20 spools of thread in his hand and climbed the tree, letting the thread unwind from the spools. Then he started winding all the thread around the bird's nest.

The robin flew out of the nest, squawking in great excitement. It flew so close to Harry its wing brushed his face.

"Look out!" Harry said. "You'll make me fall out of the tree."

But the robin didn't "look out." His cries of alarm brought other robins flying around, until Harry was surrounded by screaming robins all flapping their wings in his face. One of them tried to carry an egg away to a place of safety. But the egg slipped from the robin's claws and dropped on Harry's head! Before Harry knew what he was doing, he put his hand up there and broke the egg. It slid down his head and into his eyes . . . and Harry slid down from the tree.

Only he didn't exactly slide. He fell! He landed in the garden which was dug-up and soft, so he wasn't hurt. But his father's tulip bed was. Some very special tulips his father had imported from Holland were smashed flat when Harry fell on them.

That wasn't all. Harry's foot hit the garden hoe that was leaning against the tree. The hoe fell and broke the glass top of a patio table, and knocked off a glass pitcher and broke that too.

Harry's mother rushed from the house. "What are you doing in your father's tulip bed, Harry?" she demanded. Then she saw her broken table top and pitcher. "Oh!" she said.

"I was just helping a robin build a nest," Harry said.

"That'll be the day!" his despairing mother said, "when you show a bird how to build a nest!"

It was also a day when Harry got some very special attention from his heavy-handed father. "Birds are like people, Harry," his father then explained patiently. "They don't always want you to help them. Some things they'd rather do for themselves."
